Ford Will Testify in Person To House Unit on Nixon Pardon

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1 (WP).-President Ford offered yesterday to appear in person before a congressional subcommittee to answer questions about the circumstances under which he pardoned former President Richard Nixon. He is expected to appear next week.

This development was the result of two weeks of prodding by Rep. Hungale, who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, said that the White House told him that this would be the first time since Abraham Lincoln appeared during the Civil War that a president in office had testified before a congressional committee.

Rep. Hungate said that he was "impressed by President Ford's desire to set the record straight personally."

When Rep. Hungate first forwarded to the President 14 questions asked by Rep. Bella Abzug. D-N.Y. and Rep. John Convers. D-Mich., in the resolutions of inquiry, Mr. Ford replied with a letter saying that he or his aides had answered all the questions at press conferences. He enclosed transcripts

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1 (AP) .- The Navy has reduced the size vessels to cope with a growing Soviet naval threat.

The biggest cost increases were in the Air Force's controversial B-1 advanced bomber program and the Navy's Trident ballisticmissile-firing submarine project. The number of individual owners of stock in the country grew steadily from about 6.5 million in the early 1950s to an estimated 32.5 million in early 1972. About two years ago, however, the trend began to reverse itself, and early this year the number was estimated to be about 30.9 million. In addition, millions of investors reduced their stock holdings.

A result of the stock-market exodus was that many brokerage firms, hard-hit financially opened special departments dealing in insurance, real-estate trusts, commodities, options and other alternatives to stocks and bonds Many investors, however, decided to avoid brokerage firms altogether. Novel Approach

A relatively novel approach was taken by Nancy and Dale Reinker of Georgetown, Conn. The couple evaluated their financial position-savings certificates, stocks and real estate were among their holdings—their career goals and the economy. They decided they wanted to go into business for themselves.

"With our present 12 per cent inflation," she said, "it's the only way not to lose too much on the real value of the dollar." Some investors have been cashing in their savings certifi-cates, which pay less than certificates of deposit and are issued in smaller d: ominations, to invest in U.S. Treasury bills. Converting to Cash

Melvin Riefberg, a 45-year-old Philadelphia accountant, said he began about a year ago to convert certificates into cash so he could buy Treasury notes in $5,000 denominations that averaged an annual return of about 9 per cent.

U.S. Boy, 3, Has Lived Only in Bubble, May Never Get Out

By Paul Recer

HOUSTON, Oct. 1 (AP) .-David is a 3-year-old who has never known a mother's kiss or the touch of a bare human hand. He lives in a plastic bubble, and doctors say there's no certainty he'll ever live elsewhere, David suffers from a disease known as severe combined immune deficiency. His body has no immune defenses against disease. Even bacteria that most people can easily throw off could kill him. For three years he has breathed illtered air, eaten sterilized food and been cuddled only by hands wearing big, black rubber gloves which extend through the wall of his bubble. He was delivered by Caesarean section Sept. 21, 1971, and was immediately put into a plasticwalled bubble. Thinking of 'Getting Out' "It's only in the last month or six weeks that he's begun to think about getting out," Dr. David Freedman, a professor of psychiatry at the Baylor College of Medicine, said "I think that the next sten father, even though they've been only faces on the other side of a plastic wall. He responds to them with affection. "David doesn't know there's other ways of expressing affection," Dr. Murdina Desmond, a professor of pediatrics at Texas Children's Hospital, said. "It's

Unconventional Diplomacy

Relations between the United States and Castro's Cuba have never fitted into any very formal pattern, and have engaged the attention of many historians and publicists in trying to track down the tentative zigs and the flamboyant zags of their jagged course. It is quite in keeping with the kaleidoscopic past, therefore, that the first demisemi-official efforts to bring some kind of normality to those relations should be highly unconventional.

The gesture from Washington was made by two members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Sens. Javits and Pell. They were greeted in Havana with warmth and sent home in a glow of hope. But in between, Fidel Castro let loose a fine rhetorical fireworks display, directed against U.S.

It would be easy enough to retort to Castro's charges of Washington's interference abroad by citing the once quite unanimous opinion in the Americas that Cuban revolutionary intervention in the domestic concerns of neighbor states was a clear and dangerous fact. And to point out that Washington's folly and wrong in the Bay of Pigs was followed by Havana's folly and wrong of importing offensive missiles. But a sequence of exchanging charges will not resolve the basic problem of Cuba's position in today's Western Hemisphere, to say nothing of a large number of other American capitals.

There are real difficulties in improving discourse and trade between Cuba and the United States, quite apart from the confusions and bitterness created by the events of the past dozen years. There are claims and counter-claims involving money; there is the status of the U.S. base on Guantanamo; there is the Cuban association with the Soviet Union. One does not hear much of the Monroe Doctrine in these days: It has been largely overtaken by technology and events. But the missile crisis is not all that distant in time, détente is not all that secure, Castro is not all that independent to remove the island-90 miles from Floridacompletely from strategic considerations.

Nevertheless, it is possible now to move toward bringing Cuba into a less strained connection with the mainland. Other Latin American states want it to be done, and have taken steps in that direction; both Cuba and the United States could benefit by it, and the mutual risks that loomed so threateningly during the cold war have sensibly diminished. What specific avenues were opened by the Javits-Pell mission remain to be disclosed, but the atmosphere seems favorable to at least explore them. Unconventional diplomacy can have its advantages in unconventional situations.

Aid Endangered

The Ford administration has chosen to risk two of its most urgent foreign economic programs rather than tolerate a modestand probably ineffective - congressional effort to limit presidential discretion in the disbursal of foreign aid funds.

Neither a $200-million program for food and nutrition assistance nor the $350 million earmarked for economic development in Egypt and Syria would be likely to clear the Congress if the White House's present legislative strategy were allowed to prevail. As it is, Monday's legislative maneuvers by both supporters and opponents of the administration seemed to throw the whole foreign aid program into question.

The administration has found fault with four provisions in the foreign aid bill as it was expected to emerge from the Senate: A sharply lowered ceiling on aid to Indochina, a ban on aid to Turkey, and repeal of two long-standing loopholes by which the President could redistribute aid allotments and draw down defense department stocks of military materiel for other countries' use upon a simple declaration that he found it in the national interest to do so.

Virtually on the eve of a touch-and-go Senate debate, the administration reinforced the critics of foreign aid by indicating it would prefer no new programs at all to a bill containing those restrictions. This seems in itself a dubious ordering of priorities. The strategy envisaged that the two endangered programs could be revived in some other legislative form. It seems a grievous misreading of congressional sensitivities to imagine that measures sought by the administration could somehow be reinstated without having the restrictions sought by Congress reinstated at the same

The promised aid to Egypt is central to Secretary of State Kissinger's credibility as a Middle East negotiator, just as a tangible offer of technology for food and nutrition relief is a key step in the American campaign for international economic cooperation. It is more important to the country that these programs not be sacrificed than that the President's discretionary powers be retained. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Diplomats Protest

International Opinion

Whither Portugal?

The apparent irrationalism intermittently observable in Lisbon is undoubtedly due largely to the lack of clarity in the power makeup of the heterogeneous and delicatelybalanced structure of the bodies making up the government. These, after all, have no mandate from the nation and are in theory only there in a caretaker role until elections can clarify the situation next spring. But the irrationalism is also an expression of general insecurity, with differences of view as to how to handle urgent problems of the moment, rivalry for the future electorate and probably some sort of subconscious fear of "sinister forces' all overlaying one another in changing permutations. The latest sensation and the shift in the power structure it has caused have probably strengthened the left even further. On the other hand, Spinola's successor and sometime military superior. Costa Gomes, is undoubtedly a moderate and a cold fish into the bargain. Whether he will be successful in restoring some sort of level-headedness to those around him, or whether it will shortly become his own turn to walk the plank, remains to be seen.

—From the Neve Zuercher Zeitung (Zurich).

Portugal has stumbled against the selfevident truth that democracy, as practiced in Western Europe, is an organic growth. It does not spring fully-armed from the ruins of a dictatorship. The country may have further and worse crises to endure before the form of its governmental system is

What is happening now is the struggle for position before the elections in March, which are far enough away to cause anxiety not only about the interim but about whether they will ever take place. Only the left is organized... But although Gen. Spinola was clearly not the man to preside over the current bediam, there is good reason to believe that it will not all be "crisis and chaos," as he fears. . .

Then Halg added a curious thought about Nixon's approval of each of these invasions of privacy: Now, how formally that was done, whether it was done by Mr. Ehrlichman or Mr. Haldeman in his behalf, or Dr. Kissinger running it by him, I can't say."

Consider those words, because they reveal a conception of a phiral president that is at the root of so much of the Watergate agony. When I recently remonstrated with Haig for lying to me last year about whether the President "knew," he replied in the same vein: "You know, Bill, 'the President' is more than one man."

The idea of a hydra-headed president, with accountability diffused and blame unfixable, is the Kissinger-Haig defense against bearing responsibility for their active sponsorship of an illegal White House spying operation. They were just "following orders" from a president who-in their eyes—was sometimes J. Edgar Hoover, sometimes John Mitchell and once in a while the individual who had been elected to the job.

Italian democratic leaders are beginning to look toward the Communists he to help them out of their mess.

ROME.—There is a scurrilous rumor here to the effect that somebody in the American Embassy has been seen having lunch in a Roman trattoria with somebody in the Communist party. There may be a perfectly simple explanation for this. But considering what sort of thing it might put into the Italian Communists' minds, not to mention the Russians' minds, our man in the embassy ought to watch his

If there is anything that might make the Russians nervous it is the idea that we Americans would no longer mind too much if the Communists should join the government here. That would be the end of the Yalta line. And if there is anything the Russians have considered sacrosanct in foreign policy for well over a quarter of a century, it is the

Whether for better or worse this geopolitical line drawn down the middle of Europe by Stalin, Roosevelt and Churchill in World War II has withstood every onslaught of time. If not for the Yalta line, Italy might well be a Communist state by now. But Poland, East Germany, Hungary, Romania and Czechoslovakia might well not be Communist states by now. Czechoslovakia in particular might never have gone Communist in the first place. It is documented history that the Communist coup there in 1948 was possible only because Gen. hower, in scrupulous regard for the Yalta line, refused to let Gen. Patton's troops move in to liberate Prague before the Red Army could get there. It is also common knowledge that the Red Army's invasion of Prague in 1968 was only possible because the Kremlin could count absolutely on continuing American respect for the same Yalta line. In fact, there is strong evidence that the Russians asked for and got explicit reassurance to this effect from Washington before sending 2 single Red Army tank across the Czechoslovak border. Over the previous decade or so, the Russians could safely rely on the same sort of invaluable American detachment in Budapest, Warsaw and East Berlin

After the U.S. Economic Summit

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON.—Despite a certain amount of demagoguery and an inevitable, irreducible degree of partisanship, the U.S. "economic summit" did about as nuch as could reasonably have been expected to prepare the ground for plowing a new economic policy.

For one thing, the summit demonstrated almost universal agreement that the problems bedeviling Americans are tough, complex, interrelated and resistant to quick solutions.

For another, it dramatized the fact that responsibility for longterm solutions must be shared by the Republican administration and the Democratic Congress. Leaders of both parties will be operating under the healthy prod of the knowledge that their performance will be the main issue in the next presidential election.

Momentum

By pledging to provide his own endations within the next week, President Ford has assured that the momentum of the summit will not be lost. And by moving with dispatch himself, he has put pressure on the congressional Democrats to redeem their pledge to act this year on needed economic legislation.

As a practical matter, Congress cannot do much between now and election day. The Democrats are not going to forfeit the economic issue in the midterm campaign by endorsing Mr. Ford's suggestions, but if Republican candidates find the White House program palatable, the next four weeks can provide a healthy dialogue about alternatives in economic policy and set the stage for congressional action in the post-election session.

The most important precepts for that action were set forth by Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y. one of the leading Republican economic policy men in Congress.

"Wherever we're going," he said, "we'd better get started and since there isn't any quick solution, and the long-term effort is going to affect and involve everybody, we'd better have plenty of guidance and milenosis to measure progress along the

In line with that suggestion, it might be helpful if the President provided a timetable or set of targets for the action he recommends so the public can hold both the Congress and the President accountable for what they undertake to deliver.

Mr. Ford is a man of Congress, and he has a realistic sense of the pace of complex legislation on Capitol Hill. But if he believes the national interest requires a trade bill by a certain date, and a tax bill by a certain date, and energy legislation by a certain date, and public em-ployment legislation by a certain date, then he ought to set forth that timetable.

But he has to be equally tough on himself and his administration colleagues in judging fairly and reporting honestly the progress-or lack of progress-on the battles against inflation and reeession. Alan Greenspan has set the right tone, in banishing the fairy-tale talk of his predecessor at the Council of Economic Advisers, in favor of some stark appraisals of our economic situation. His candor ought to be the model for all administration economic spokesmen.

In addition to pressure for action, and strict standards for evaluating progress, one other thing is needed from the national leadership. That is a clear signal that equity will be just as im-portant as economic efficiency in setting new policies.

The American people are not children. They understand that some real sacrifices must be made to keep this economic squeeze from becoming an economic catestrophe.

If essential defense and domestic expenditures are to be met, and new investments in energy and resource development made, it is obvious someone is going to have to pay higher taxes.

If the inflationary cycle is going to be broken, without putting the economy back into the straitjacket of rigid controls, it is obvious that some "catch-up" wage and price increases will have to be foregone.

If savings are to be increased and new capital is to be provided to expand production of basic commodities, then consumption of luxury items must be dis-

Those things are clear to everyone, even if the mix of policies for achieving them is not,

Fair Play

The citizens and voters of this country may not be economic experts, but they have an acute sense of fair play. Inflation and sion have not affected all groups and classes equally; some have been squeezed far harder

As the black economic summit meeting said in its manifesto, The burden of halting inflation must not be placed on those least able to shoulder the costs." If Mr. Ford addresses himself both to the task of curing the economy and of providing some equitable relief for those have been the hardest-hit victims of inflation and recession, then he can expect a positive response in both Congress and the country.

The Soviet Union is presumed to want to increase the price of the oil that it sells to Eastern Europe, raising it to about the new high levels charged on the world market, rather than extend beyond the end of 1975 the price levels that it has accorded East European allies during the current five-year-plan period.

Mr Kadar, who last year curtailed some aspects of Hungary's relatively free-wheeling "new economic mechanism," brought with him his new economic planning chief Karol Nemeth as well as Premier Jeno Fock and other top

In his welcoming speech last Thursday, Mr. Brezhnev emphasized the need to "make ever fuller use of the possibilities" of close economic cooperation among Communist states and to procance of the Warsaw Pact's economic arm, Comecon.

The relative mildness of the communique's language and the references to the need for "further work to coordinate the five-year plans," in realms of modern technology as well as fuels, suggested that differences remained despite the extremely cordial atmosphere of Mr. Kadar's visit and the Soviet reception of the Hungarian leader

During his public appearances here, Mr. Kadar has acted as a spokesman for the proposed new worldwide conference of Communist parties, halling the last one in 1969 as a success. The Soviet Union, which since July, 1973, reportedly has been the prime mover in private for this conclave, has taken a more modest public role, evidently to avoid appearing too eager.

In a generally conciliatory twohour televised talk to the nation. Mr. Thien also promised to amend a restrictive decree on political parties that in effect has made his own Democracy party the only legal political organization in South Vietnam.

Kenyans Cancel Work Permit of A U.S. Geologist

ADDIS ABABA, Oct. 1 (WP).-Kenya has canceled the work permit of an American geologist involved in a legal battle with high government officials for ownership of a huge ruby mine located in the Tsavo National Game Park.

Diplomatic sources in Nairobi said that Elliott (Tim) Miller, who had been in hiding in Kenya for nearly a month, turned himself in to immigration officials Saturday and was informed that his permit was being lifted on the grounds that his original application, flied in 1966, was filled out

Mr. Miller did not lose his visa however, and in theory at least could stall return to Kenya as a visitor, according to these source He left the country Saturday for

Meanwhile, Mr. Miller's partner, John Saul, who was expelled from Kenya in June, denied government charges that he was involved in the smuggling of ivory and gemstones from the country. "It's a lot of rubbish," he said.

He also said that a Washington Post dispatch on their case (IHT, Sept. 28-29) was inaccurate when it said that he and Mr. Miller had exported 1.5 million carats of rubies. He said they had exported only 300 kilograms of red commdum containing rubles worth $30,000 to $40,000 and not 300 kilos of rubies as the article suggested. Introducing the Airbus. Extravagant on comfort. Stingy on fuel.

The Airbus is a remarkable aircraft combining two advantages never before present on short flights: maximum comfort and large capacity.

The Airbus gives you lots of legroom, more than you've ever had on short flights. It has great big doors, spacious entryways, two wide aisles. And because there's twice the cabin baggage space, you can carry aboard larger bags than ever before.

Even a large suitcase of 45 by 37 cm is permitted, and it stores conveniently in an enclosed space over your seat. Throughout the Airbus, seating is arranged so that you're never more than one seat away from an aisle. You can even choose to sit in a no-smoking section if you wish. In fact, every detail down to the lighting and air conditioning has been conceived with your comfort and convenience in mind.

One of the Airbus' greatest advances is its engines. They're the quietest jet engines ever developed. And moreover, they use a lot less fuel than previous jets. With the Airbus' large capacity, there's a tremendous saving on fuel per passenger.

So when you fly the Airbus, go ahead and enjoy its extravagance on comfort. It's justified by its stinginess on fuel.

Waving Fingers at the Gale

For today's instant communication is the instant simplification that goes with it. When President Ford and Mr. Kissinger bore down on the very tough problem posed by global inflation—and the part played in it by arbitrary increases in the price of oil -it was promptly dubbed, by the instant analysts, a "get tough" policy. And the response, from, among others, the Shah of Iran, visiting in faraway Australia, was not to what the President and the secretary of state said, but to how their remarks had been interpreted. "No one can wave a finger at us," said the Shah, "because we will wave a finger back."

Waving fingers to still a global economic gale is about as effective as whistling for a wind in a calm. The developing ofl-producing nations have a case, and the Shah made it, sketchily, in his interview. The President of Venezuela has made it at greater length and with rather more plausibility in advertisements directed toward the American public. The case goes back to the crux of the matter: the terms of

Producers of all raw materials have been very largely at the mercy of world market prices for their commodities. This has been tempered at times by various international cartel arrangements, as in sugar and coffee, and differing forms of local control have affected the price of other foodstuffs. Least affected by actual price-fixing have been in-

One of the penalties the world must pay dustrial products in a highly competitive market. Yet the costs of those products have risen, largely through demand both among the industrialized and developing nations, and it is the latter who have been most severely affected.

To reduce these diverse and complex factors in the terms of trade to a rational basis will be far from easy. Lowering prices for industrial products does not only require shaving profits-and thereby reducing incentives and capital for investment-but lowered wages as well, so long as energy and raw material costs are fixed, or increase. And that, as the current election campaign in Britain will probably make clear, creates a very dangerous political situation. France is approaching its energy problem bravely, but there is little indication that its course will reduce the costs of its products. There is no facile answer to the questions posed by terms of trade in unilateral action by any

That answer can only be supplied by what the President and Mr. Kissinger advocate: International action that will take the interests of all into account. But in the meanwhile, oil prices, set by the world's most effective cartel, are adding to the confusion. making both manufactured goods and food more expensive for everyone-including the oil producers. The Shah may wave his finger at that, but if he hopes Iran will be more than a big off well, he must take it

Détente

No one is going to oppose the ideal of Soviet-American détente, in its pure meaning, any more than one would willingly choose a world of tension and hostility in preference to a "generation of peace." The issue is whether the pursuit of détente is being wisely conducted, with proper regard for fundamental interests and full realization of pitfalls as well as rewards.

Secretary of State Kissinger's long-promised testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week provided a convenient summation of the sound conceptual arguments which he has developed in a series of statements over recent years.

He gave needed emphasis to the point that détente is a continuing process, a dynamic relationship, not a state of grace that at a given time will be finally achieved, signed and sealed, permitting the two superpowers to move on to other things. Détente is a pattern of mutual behavior that arises from To be effective, in short, détente must give each side something that it wants.

The chief reservation about the policy of détente, as conceived by Mr. Kissinger under two presidents now, is that this country may find itself settling for minimal tangible benefit for itself in pursuit of a desirable abstraction, while the Soviet leadership successfully extracts real concessions in return

Nowhere is this danger more clearly raised than in Secretary Kissinger's discussion of expanding trade relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. "The significance of trade . . . is inflated out of all proportion," he said, when political concessions—on Soviet emigration policy or other matters—are demanded in exchange.

It is difficult to talk with a single Soviet official these days without learning that, far from being inflated out of proportion, trade is the single most important component in detente, as viewed from Moscow. Easing of nuclear tensions, formal recognition of the European status quo—these are desired goals of Soviet foreign policy; but the desperate. driving impulse of detente is access to Western advanced technology.

The broadest criticism to be made of the détente policy as so far implemented is that the extent of the political cost which the Russians are willing to pay for this access has scarcely even been tested in American diplomacy.

Mr. Kissinger argues that this country's bargaining power is limited, for the technology the Russians so desire is available as well from other countries as the United States. True in principle, perhaps, but demonstrably false in the recent years' experience of frustrated Soviet trade missions around the world. The dimensions of scale in the Soviet economy are so vast, the capacity of the Western industrial worldexcluding the United States - so small by comparison, that only this country can begin to provide the massive capacity which Moscow requires.

Even the working procedures on the American side of the trade bargaining process can the contrary. While the Soviets envisage their many transactions in the broad context of political and economic needs, the American side has too often been content to let private entrepreneurs make their own deals on a purely commercial basis. If the government finally moves in to consider these transactions from a national interest viewpoint, it may be too late to matter.

The danger of détente as it has been pursued, therefore, is that the United States may get an eloquently expressed design for interrelationship, while the Russians get a new generation of computers. Compounding this imbalance, principles of behavior-however solemnly agreed-can be readily revoked, technological knowledge once disclosed can never be withdrawn.

Many in the executive branch as well as the Congress are well aware of these dangers. It is their responsibility to restrain an enthusiastic political leadership in the White House and State Department from succumbing to the abstract desirability of superpower détente, and insist that every single economic and political engagement with the Soviet Union be studied for its measure of mutual benefit, on its own merits.

Toward Cyprus Peace

The overwhelming (307 to 90) approval by drawals that will make fruitful negotiations the House of a binding cutoff in military aid to Turkey until "substantial progress" is made toward a Cyprus settlement dramatizes American revulsion against the massive Turkish aggression on the island. The action was also aimed at forcing administration compliance with laws that mandate such a cutoff when a recipient country misuses American military assistance.

Secretary of State Kissinger warned Congress that this move would be "destructive" of his efforts to advance a solution for Cyprus, but the exact opposite seems more plausible. Washington will now find it very difficult to maintain anything like the normai flow of military aid unless Turkeycurrently the strongest party by far in the dispute-will demonstrate greater willingness to order the troop and territorial with-possible. Mr. Kissinger is now in a stronger position to make that point than he was before the House voted

One hopeful development is an indication from the Turks that the negotiations between leaders of the two Cyprus communities should move on from the agreement on prisoner exchange and strictly humanitarian matters to issues of political substance. These talks can continue even while Greece and Turkey are preoccupied with their election campaigns.

Prospects for a Cyprus settlement and solutions for other combustible Greek-Turkish questions-including those involving oil drilling rights, territorial waters and air space in the Aegean - will be greatly enhanced if both countries emerge from the elections with strong majority governments.

Henry Kissinger Reconsidered

By Anthony Lewis

ROSTON.-At his confirmation hearings a year ago, Secre-tary of State Kissinger was asked his view of CIA covert operations. He replied in terms of American values: "I would say that our genius does not reside in clandestine activities on a broad scale." He added the caveat that he thought it would be dangerous to abolish "certain types of these activities."

Another public expression of Kissinger's views on interference in other countries was President warning against too strong American support for the cause of Soviet Jews and dissenters. The voice was the voice of Nixon, but the hands were surely of Kissinger: We would not welcome the intervention of other countries in our domestic affairs, and we expect them cooperative when we seek to intervene directly in theirs. We cannot gear our foreign policy to transformation of other societies." While opposing intervention in behalf of freedom in the Soviet Union, we now know, Kissinger presided over a program of sub-version that helped turn Chile from democracy to tyranny. He did so not with his public attitude of concern for American values and respect for national sovereignty but with an arrogant assumption of the right determine the fate of other societies. He reportedly told the Forty Committee, which controls t activities abroad: "I don't see why we need to go Communist due to the irresponsibility of its own people."

Humpty Dumpty

The point of reciting the record is not to catch Kissinger in some more dissembling. Anywho cares knows by now that that is his nature. Even after the Chile caper was exposed, he could not resist misrepresenting its character when he urged congressional leaders not to restrain covert operations. He is like Humpty Dumpty, who said in a rather scornful tone: "When I use a word it means just what I chose it to meanneither more nor less."

The need, rather, is for the country to see Kissinger whole, without stardust in his eyes. Along with his undoubted brilliance as a negotiator there come defects that are increasingly annarent and that require correction elsewhere.

Two thoughtful appraisals of the Kissinger record have just appeared. One, written for Boston Globe, by Richard Holbrooke, managing editor of the magazine Foreign Policy. The other, in the current Atlantic, is by Thomas L. Hughes, president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Holbrooke halls Kissinger's ability, calling him "the most successful diplomat in American history," but puts a critical focus on his methods and values. He can maneuver effectively, Holbrooke suggests, because he operates without limits of principle or conviction. In the Vietnam negotiations, for example, he "was wholly free of any constraint based on a set of moral beliefs." Nor does he let "human beings interfere with policy." Some of his former associates "consider him wholly without

Just the other day he told a group of senators that his own aides considered further military aid to Turkey unlawful -and indicated that he proposed ignore the law unl ulicitly ordered to obey it. Hughes concentrates on substantive effects of leaving everything to Kissinger. "personalism" he suggests, risks putting the whole emphasis of American foreign policy on mat-ters that interest Klasinger-or susceptible to his talents-

but that may not deserve such Thus the Kissinger years have put enormous weight on the idea of détente with the Soviet Union. But what if the incremental gains of détente, Hughes asks, "are mostly public relations?" or what if the United States and Soviet Union together opt out of the hard issues that are going to be "the world's work for the rest of this century?" It is no secret now what those deeper issues are: Resources, food, energy, economics. One reason there has been inadequate attention to them is that they have not happened to interest ican foreign policy. After a year of selling arms to the Persian Gulf states and parading Richard Nixon through the streets of Cairo, Kissinger has suddenly discovered that the price of Arab oil is too high. We should not have had to wait for him.

U.S. Role Examined

Mideast 'Commitment'

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON.—The idea of sorting out and reducing U.S. foreign commitments is such a firm part of the post-Victnam conventional wisdom that it comes as something of a shock-but, on reflection, a useful and encouraging one-to be warned that the Mideast is one place where American commitments may have to be increased.

Indeed, as set forth by Harvard fessor Naday Safran in the latest issue of Foreign Affairs magazine, it's already happening. The Syrian-Israeli and Egyptian-Israeli troop disengagement accords were brought into being by American commitments to provide aid and support to the local parties and to police the accords.
"Additional and increasingly weighty American commitments will have to be made, Safran says in his article entitled "Engagement in the Middle East," move negotiations forward on the much more difficult substantive

Bridle

At the word "commitment," to be sure, many Americans instinc-tively bridle. To them it means involvement, trouble, over-reach ing, troops, war, Vietnam.

To Safran, however, and to Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, whose Mideast policy he admires, "commitment" has a contrary, positive aspect: to pro-vide a mutually agreeable link and, without giving either side an advantage in preparation for war, to give both sides incentives and channels to move toward a

To judge by the record so far, this is a popular course for Americans. With virtually none of the sharp debate that still marks deliberations on Vietnam, the Congress has accepted the troop disengagement accords and voted the substantial sums of aid requested to implement them. To an extent that few could have foreseen, popular partisanship in the Arab-Israeli dispute yielded to the consensus that support for both sides is in their mutual interest and in the American interest, too.

Ray of Light

This is a ray of light in a dark sky, one not adequately appreciated. Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy has taken the popular spotlight, but for the long haul you need a policy supported by Congress—surely Vietnam taught all of us that—and Kissinger's Mideast strategy seems both to require and to earn such support in a way that could not be imagined if the policy aimed exchusively at either the security of Israel or the assurance of

Arab oil. There is no reason to believe, by the way, that Gerald Ford's accession to the presidency has altered the essentials of this

Not so long ago the guiding principle of American global policy, or at least the guiding rhetoric, lay in the softly comforling Nixon doctrine, whose promise it was to ease the security burden of friendly states from American shoulders onto their own. As Mr. Nixon no doubt knew, Americans were aching to hear that their retreat from a pertain kind of activist world leadership would leave our friends as well as ourselves better off.

The emerging Mideast truth is. however, that a hands-off policy is out of the question. It is hard to think of any similar situation where all the parties to a dispute were so eager to involve the United States in its settlement. If in Vietnam we were a large part of the problem, in the Mideast we are a large part of the solution. This is a heavy charge to us but it is a tribute and source of leverage too.

Permanent Part

So it is that, while the United States is seeking to reduce its responsibilities in many other parts of the world, it is consciously increasing its role overall-though not in the crucial sense of military participation—in the Mideast and is making itself a virtually permanent part of the political furniture of that region. No one can fairly say there are no dangers for the United States. The rationale for expanding American commitments in the new flux is to keep those dangers within bounds. It means we are building ourselves into an uncertain future, but the alternative

—the replacement of the American restraining hand with a Soviet manipulative hand—seems In the past Kissinger has shied away from acknowledging that the United States is becoming "guarantor" of a Mideast settlement. In this matter Safran finds him excessively defensive. The administration would be better advised to stress its "monumental" interests in the region instead of minimizing the commitments that would serve them, Sofran argues. "American wealth and power and American intelligence and idealism have seldom had a worthier object."

Siemens Sales Up 10%

Worldwide sales of Siemens rose about 10 per cent to 17 billion deutsche marks in the year ended Sept. 30 from 15.45 billion DM a year earlier, reports Peter von Siemens, supervisory board chairman of the electronics firm. About half of the total turnover was attributable to foreign sales. "Unless something catastrophic occurs, we expect the trends of the nine months to continue," he says. The company has just completed an agreement with Rheinstahl, the West German steel and engineering group, to purchase its Hanomag construction machinery division for the equivalent of more than $45.2 million. The exact price will depend on the valuation of Hanomag's inventories. Massey-Ferguson will invest a further $5 million in Hanomag over the next year in an effort to turn the money-losing unit into a profitable operation by 1975. Massey-Ferguson expects to make record capital investments of more than $100 million a year for each of the next three fiscal years. The money is to be spent on a wide variety of projects, including new production capacity, replacement and cost improvement.

White, Weld Takes Over U.S. Firm White, Weld & Co., the U.S. investment banking firm, plans to take over G.H. Walker, Laird Inc. which itself went through a merger a little more than a year ago. Unlike other recent Wall Street mergers, financial troubles were not a factor. Paul Hallingby jr., president of both White, Weld & Co. and its corporate parent, White Weld Holdings, says that Walker, Laird was "not in financial difficulties." He places the capitalization of White, Weld Holdings at "over $50 million" before the merger and at "around $60 million" after the merger. Both firms reported a ratio of debt-to-capital, as of Aug. 31. of 4-to-1—well within the 15-to-1 maximum allowed by the New York Stock Exchange. White, Weld has 12 U.S. offices and seven abroad. Walker, Laird has 14 U.S. offices-nine of them in cities where White. Weld is unrepresented. The agreement to merge, subject to approval by the NYSE, is expected to be completed by Nov. 1.

The strike is the wrost at Ford since a nine-week walkout in 1971. Ford that year reported a £30.7-million loss.

Meanwhile. Chrysler (U. K.) Ltd. today laid off 3,250 workers at its engine plant in Coventry because of a strike by 300 toolroom workers. The company expects it may have to lay off another 1,000 or more tomorrow if the strike continues.

Find Means to Pay, Europeans Say

The most specific recycling proposal was outlined by Mr. Healey. According to his plan, the oil countries would be invited to invest surplus money in the IMF and receive a normal rate of interest Privately, Mr. Healey has suggested that the IMF might attract as much as $30 billion from Arab nations, who would then have an excellent asset in the form of a claim on the IMF."

French Finance Minister Jean-Pierre Fourcade endorsed the Healey plan in principle but sug-gested that it need not be the only vehicle for recycling. French officials said that it would be reasonable for the IMF to start with a $5-billion to $10-billion program, counting on private banks and bilateral deals to work off more of the oil cartel's sur-

The United States has had two arguments against a bigger IMP re-lending facility: First, it would be tantamount to abandoning the fight for lower prices, and second, it would transfer to the DMF all of the risk when it comes to distributing the money to countries in trouble. And as a 50 per cent shareholder in the IMP, the United States alone would be assuming half of the risk,

In his speech, Mr. Healey claimed that a new IMF re-lending facility would have many advantages, including the initiation of a useful dialogue for the first time between the oil producers and oil consumers.

Exceptional Security

The cartel countries, Mr. Healey said, also "might well feel that the creation of a major new facility in which to invest a large part of their earnings with exceptional security" at normal rates of interest would enable them to make more "soft loans" to poor countries.

France's Fourcade, speaking also as this year's chairman of the European Economic Community's Council of Ministers, said that the EEC itself is "currently studying the possibility of participating on its own account in recycling oper-

A high French official, noting U.S. objections to a major IMF facility, told reporters that !t would be better to permit the cartel countries to escape responsibility for some of the credit risks "than to face the economic crisis that would develop if we do nothing."

Moreover, he said that Europeans have concluded that if the IAF does not establish a broader recycling facility, most of the oil dollars will come to the United States, thus creating new ex-change rate problems between Europe and the United States.

"The fundamental problem in the present situation." the French official said. "is not so much a decline in oil prices. That is not plausible. The problem is to adapt to the higher prices, and organize our society and employment levels on a new price for

He conceded that by adapting to high oil prices, the world will have to content itself with lower rates of real growth, instead of the 6. 7 or 8 per cent formerly talked about.

No Overkill

Mr. Simon went out of his way to reassure the Europeans that President Ford's forthcoming new economic program would not "engage in overkill," leading to a recession here that would trigger a worldwide slump.

This fear is widely held outside of the United States. Mr. Healey expressed the common view yes terday when he said that "none of us can hope to avoid disaster if there is a severe recession in the United States."

Mr. Simon, nevertheless, reiterated his view that while there is a risk in moving "too slowly to relax restraints," here or in the rest of the world, "a much greater risk" would be to move "too rapidtoward expansive policies."

When You Consider the Szfety of Your Investment...

WHAT IS MORE STABLE THAN THE U.S. DOLLAR AND GOVERNMENT?

In spite of sharing the problem of inflation with the rest of the world, the U.S. dollar is still one of the strongest currencies in the world. And the U.S. govemment is the most stable of any; who ever heard of nationalisation of industries or the freezing of land in the U.S.A.? Or coups d'etat or revolutionary juntas toppling the U.S. government? It just doesn't happen in the U.S.A.

And the state that is economically strongest in the U.S.A. is CALIFORNIA, WHOSE GROSS PRODUCT IS EXCEEDED BY ONLY SIX NATIONS IN THE WORLD - including the U.S. California has the largest population, largest economy, largest economic diversification, and largest profit potential for the international investor.

And California has the largest land-brokerage firm, Pre-Builder Land Corporation — the internationally recognized leader in California land investment.

PBL is licensed by the stringent California Real Estate Commission, and for a decade and a half PBL has guided its clients into safe, profitable land investments. ("Ve are the international subsidiary of PBL, serving investors worldwide.)

International banks increase investment in Wobaco

Share capital raised to $22 million

e Trading

Wobaco Holding Company S.A. of Luxembourg, owners of World Banking Corporation Limited of Nassau, Bahamas and banks and financial service companies in Luxembourg, London, Cayman and Jersey is increasing its share capital from $12,000,000 to $21,600,000.

This was approved by shareholders at a meeting in Toronto on September 27. They include Bank of America, Toronto Dominion Bank, Banque Lambert S.C.S., Banque Nationale de Paris, Banco de Santander, Commerzbank A.G., The Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank Ltd., Skandinaviska Enskilda Banken and E. van Lanschot Bankiers. Appropriate Government authorisations have been requested.

Mr. Tom B. Coughran, Chairman of Wobaco, told shareholders that net earnings for the first eight months of 1974, after write-downs for known and identifiable losses, were in excess of $2,000,000. The increase in share capital would be accomplished by converting a subordinated loan of $6,000,000 from the shareholders and by issuing new shares in the approximate amount of $3,600,000 which will be purchased by the existing shareholders.

In addition, the shareholders have guaranteed the commitment of the Holding Company with respect to issued but nil paid shares of World Banking Corporation Limited, which are subject to call at any time in the total amount of $15 million.

The Chairman reported on the restructuring programme of the Group which commenced in 1973 when the shareholders exchanged their shares in World Banking Corporation Limited Nassau for equal holdings in the newly organised Luxembourg Holding Company. This programme has been successfully achieved and all members of the Group are now subsidiaries of the Holding Company.

ALL THINGS BRIGHT AND BEAUTIFUL By James Herriot. 378 pp. St. Martin's Press. $8.95.

repeating ourselves: His seccond book is much the same as the first and I enjoyed it just as much. I would have supposed that after having read one account of the life of a young veterinary surgeon in the hills of Yorkshire during the late 1930s, I would have had enough, but apparently I haven't. If Dr. Herriot writes a third book on this subject—as he probably will -I'm sure I'll read and enjoy that one, too.

Although "All Things Bright and Beautiful" bears a strong resemblance to "All Creatures Great and Small," I find myself responding to it partly for different reasons. In the first volume. I was so taken up with the animals that I didn't sufficiently appreciate the people. Perhaps, after reading a run of modern novels, I tended to gravitate toward some other form of Animals are ideal patientsthey don't try to outguess their doctors—and the drama of salvation is one we never tire of. Then, too, a curable physical illness is almost refreshing in com-parison to the ubiquitous psychic complaints of the "highest" animal. In one instance, we see nature and the yet working hand in hand: Since he cannot cure a dying animal, Dr. Herriot gives it enough anesthetic to let it die in peace, without pain. This respite is enough for the animal to heal itself, and we realize that flesh is, or once was, sturdler stuff than we generally suppose. The glucose tube is not an inbilicus

But as I was saying, you can read and savor "All Things Bright and Beautiful" for its examples of our own species. There's Dr. Herriot himself, a veritable advertisement for the value of investing yourself in your work and for the incomparable charms of earned repose. His daily life is filled with challenges, which he meets with blood, sweat and humor. Although he is no James Hanley or Henry Green, he can tell s story as well, I would say, as any living veterimarian. And he has what I would call an optimal level of ego development; pride and humility, confidence and diffidence, in just the right propor-

True, there was one chance. South could have cashed all his side-suit winners, ruffed a spade and then led a trump. This would succeed if one defender held a singleton diamond and singleton ace of trumps. This legitimate chance amounted to about I per cent and was scarcely worth having, so South looked for an illegitimate chance—a swindle.

The opening lead was taken with the spade king, and a trump was led to West's ace. A diamond shift would have disturbed South's plan, but West continued naturally with the spade jack. South won and rattled off five rounds of trumps. On dummy's last trump, he discarded a dia-

Fired-Up Redskins Roll Over Broncos

By Leonard Shapiro

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1 (WP). -The Washington Redskins' defense held the Denver Broncos last night while the much-maligned Washington offense performed enough tricks to defeat the visitors, 30-3. Charley Taylor, the man with the stone fingers last week when he dropped two certain touch-down passes, made up for that with splendid scoring receptions of three and 11 yards. Quarterback Bill Kilmer completed 17 of 23 passes for 223 yards and the two touchdowns. Duane Thomas scored a touchdown with 11 seconds to play. And Mark Moseley hit on field goals of 37, 22 and 18 yards as the Redskips improved their record to 2-1.

The defense, as usual, was magnificent. The Broncos could manage only a field goal in the third quarter and, when they threatened to make a game of it a few minutes later, twice they failed to gain the necessary yard for a first down at the Redskins'

11-yard line.
All of that developed on a night when the Redskins dared to throw on first down, put a man in motion on almost every play and, for a change, pitch the long

NEW YORK, Oct. 1 (NYT),-It was Robert (Tiger) Irsay, the owner, who dismissed Howard Schnellenberger, coach of the Baltimore Colts, this week and not Joe Thomas, the team's general manager, who had become accustomed to terminating the employment of Colt players and

In fact, Irsay shocked Thomas by immediately naming him as interim coach of a team which has little chance to achieve a winning record this season.

Irsay, in the habit of calling those around him "Tiger," executed the time-honored privilege of sports ownership. He made up his mind while patrolling the Baltimore sideline during the second half in Philadelphia Sunday as the Colts were being beaten by the Eagles, 30-10, Irsay prefers Bert Jones at quarterback rather than Marty Domres, who has been starting. He asked Schnellenberger when he would replace Domres with Jones. The coach responded with a tart reply which he later could not recall. The retor led to his dismissal within the hour.

Thomas, a personnel scout before becoming general manager, has had no pro coaching experience except brief tours as an assistant with the Colts, Rams and Toronto Argonauts in the 1950s.

After Sunday's game, Irsay said, "I have just fired the coach. Baltimore Colts will go on that field to win even if I have to Canada's hardest-worked team member was goaltender Gerry Cheevers. Time and again, Cheevers grabbed spectacular saves that had even the Russian fans cheering.

The team's veteran, Gordie Howe. 46, also gained a Russian fan club with playing that was distinctly gentlemanly in comparison with the prevailing standards. The game was interrupted by frequent brawls not all of which were reflected in the final penalty list.

That combination brought the Pirates a 2-1 victory over Chicago and kept them tled with St. Louis for first place in the National League East with two games to

If the tie holds for the next two nights, the teams will decide the division title in a one-game playoff at Three Rivers Stadium here Thursday. Bill Bonham did his best to

But the third was Manny Sanguillen's leadoff buntsingle in the seventh inning, and the fourth, one out later, was Zisk's pinch-hit triple that traveled nearly 400 feet to centerfield. Kison, meanwhile, gave up two hits in the first inning, when he

-Wilt Chamberlain, the most prolific scorer in pro basketball will announce his retirement this week. The announcement will be made in an article in this week's issue of the magazine Sports Illustrated. After 14 seasons in the National Basketball Association, Chamberlain, 28, who holds most of the league's records, jumped last season from the Los Angeles Lekers to the San Diego Conquistadors of the American Basketball Association. He signed a threeyear contract that was worth $1.8 million and included part ownership of the Q's.

The ABA had hoped that Chamberlain's playing presence would boost attendance around the league. However, he never got to play for the Q's. The Lekers contested the move in the courts and Chamberlain was forbidden to play because he owed the Lakers the option year of a $450,000-a-year con-

We have been so active in the field, however, that a number of our projects have come to light. Iran, Indonesia, South Vietnam. Greece, the Congo, Guatemala, Cuba—all have had their domestic politics secretly interfered with by the Central Intelligence Agency in ways that made headlines.

One of the CIA's few endearing traits is its penchant for making headlines. It is the world's most fully headlined secret agency. This is as it should be in an open society and while it is doubtless embarrassing to the CIA always to have its secrets turning up on Page One, we are more than compensated for its ineptitude by the opportunity it affords us to know ourselves.

The difficulty may be that we prefer not to know ourselves. How else can we explain these cries of shock that followed each fresh disclosure that the CIA has done it again? We hear them again about the Chile intervention. In Washington, wise men who are on a first-name basis with Professor Klssinger are shocked - shocked! - to discover that the United States is overthrowing other peoples' gov-

It is not a difficult paradox to explain. We have listened to our own publicity for so long that we believe it. Since 1945 our publicity agents have been telling us we are the good guys, the white hats, the idealists struggling for democracy and freedom along dark streets swarming with the kind of thugs who overthrow other peoples' governments and put their own ax men in charge.

This is a very pleasant picture to have of yourself. It is traumatic to have people as authoritative as the President tell you it is the picture of Dorlan Gray, and worse to have him pull the curtain away and show you what you have really come to look like after all these years of preening your beauty in the sunlight but taking all those clandestine nocturnal strolls down the back

The Northern England Nightclub Boom

By Alan Tillier

HEDS (IHT),-You can't see much of the so-called pre-election gloom as you drive into the Yorkshire town of Batley on a Saturday night. The town remains the heart of the amazing northern England nightclub scene, which blares on at a time when cabaret lights are going out elsewhere—and not only in England.

The pubs in the town center look dark and empty but that's because the action is elsewhere. Up a road the Batley Workingmen's Club is about to launch the evening's entertainment and singers and comics wait for the organist to warm up. The ladies sip their drinks in the well-appointed lounge and the men, Andy Capp style, play spooker in the Men Only Games room.

Club secretary Frederick Smith, 70, ex-painter and decorator, presides over 900 male and 230 female members who pay 2 mere 40 pence a year membership but who spend enough at the bars to pay for the club's new £72,000 premises. "We could have had a 500seat concert hall for another £20,000 but that'll have to wait. The club has never been in debt in its 100 years." Mr. Smith said.

He pays his entertainers £12 to £25 a night and throws in an extra 25 if they go down well. He limits the number of female impersonators on the bill and keeps out blue comics. They have 2 good time at the Workingmen's Club where everyone knows everyone else. Old-style morality reigns, however, and Mr. Smith bemosins, "Humor has changed. It's too mucky now. The other night a comic offered me a spare copy of his joke book. I told him straight I didn't want to carry that fifth around."

Asking for the Moon

The other complaint is that performers "now ask for the moon." The old pound-a-night comics of the postwar era now want 250. But that's peanuts for the establishment down another road, the Batley Variety Club, one of Europe's top night spots. The best, in Batley's view. Although Mr. Smith and his members cannot afford a night out down there, they are proud of the Variety Club "for it's the only place that can pay for Shirley Bassey."

The Variety Club's big neon sign blinks on a parking lot full of buses, Jaguars and Rovers.

Burly veterans of the local Rugby League club, squeezed into dinner jackets, screen the crowds (the north of England can still be pretty tough on hard-drinking Saturday nights). People pay a flexible entrance fee according to the star appearing-it was £250 for Johnny Mathis—and Jeff Beavers, a train engineer turned floor manager, sees that everything runs smoothly among the 1,500 to 1,700 visitors ("Our bouncers never lose," Mr. Beavers says.) Sthrimp and French fries flowed to the tables where the ladies were in strapless gowns and the men soberly suited except for a few with colored shirts and bow ties.

Some of the comics were a bit blue but this went down well with large party of ladies from Bolton, a factory group celebrating last Christmas ("We couldn't do it at the time because of the threeday week," was the explanation they offered for the delayed night

The audience also included U.S. airmen from nearby bases and bus groups from all over, including London.

Killed by Silence

"Up here the audience kills a bad turn by silence, complete silence," said one northern show business columnist.

Business is holding up very well generally and London agent Tommy Wallace has booked Frankie Leine around the northern clubs in November. He says: "The clubs pay top stars up to £25,000 a week. It's a very healthy business currently despite the state of the country. People want to enjoy themselves. The working man still wants his drink and to watch the girls,"

James Dowd, editor of "Club Mirror," just back from a "working trip" to Las Vegas with a batch of northern club owners, said without a blink of an eye: "Las Vegas runs a similar show to ours, although a bit more lavish."

His club newspaper figures that beer sales in all clubs in Britain

now run at fi million per day. Most of it is being spent in the North for the South does not have clubs of Batley's size. Another estimate is that bottled beer alone is being consumed at the rate of £100 million a year. Never mind the whisky.

No wonder Dowd is now organizing the National Club Show, with clubs having stands, at Belle Vue, Manchester. Liverpool, with its 4,000 clubs, will be well represented.

Bingo Kings

So will Sheffield, the steel town, where the "genuine" Bavarian beethouse built by Germans cannot compete with the excitement over at the Flesta Night Chib, which bingo kings Keith and Jim Lipthorpe have built into what they call "Europe's most luxurious nightclub"-they've got a wide stairway leading to the vast cabaret room, banks of lighted tables and Italian gold-leaf tiles on the wall.
"The lord mayor sits next to the dustman here," says the Flesta's chief bouncer, Weishman Bill Jordan, who heads a team of ex-commandos. There are no Saturday-night football rowdies in the Flests, where Sheffield couples spend around 27 on the average. Eleven hundred people is considered a quiet night. They can fit 1,500 in the big room twice a night and charge £5.50 a head for someone like Ella Frizgerald. "We have to clear £16,000 most weeks before we start making a profit," says Bob Bacon, who worked his way from barman to floor manager.

He added: "It's a different scene here to the old northern clubs where everyone knew each other. Here they come in groups of two, four and six." The big British TV comedians like Charlie Williams and Bernard Manning started in clubs such as the Fiesta.

Mr. Lipthorpe, of the Flesta, who opens a 2,500-seat club in ekton shortly, says that with more clubs opening, performers are exploiting the tight supply of top entertainers "and have doubled their price over the past two years. You get British performers now asking £8,000 to £10,000 a week and you can double that for Americans. We cannot raise our cover charges to meet the new price of entertainers, some of whom are making a killing,"

Saturday-night business at the Plesta seemed good enough, however, to keep a staff of 160 busy, while the 22-club chain run by the Balley Organization of South Shields has just added a new 2,000seat club at Stoke-on-Trent.

Balley spokesman Jack Ramsey says business has been affected by the general economic situation. "But it remains quite good and is certainly the one bright spot in an otherwise gloomy national Balley's, now Europe's largest club chain, started on Tyneside with a little place opened by two engineers. Now, says Ramsey, the chain supplies first-class cabaret (Johnny Ray is a Bailey's

Equal of the World

Top London booking agent Peter Prichard says: "These clubs are now equal to anything in the world. I mean Andy Williams and Victor Borge play Wakefield, Yorkshire."

The Wakefield Theater Club, run by former bingo-hall owner Steve Bartell, 32, has also had the Woody Herman and Stan Kenton bands Tony Bennett, Sarah Vaughan and the Royal Philharmonic

"The Wakefield crowd loved the orchestra," Mr. Prichard said. But the conductor told me afterwards that it was the first place they'd played where the audience handed up drinks to the musicians." The northerners still really prefer their homebred comics like

Bernard Manning, who start out with lines like: "I know we've all had a lot to drink, but let's try and keep it clean." It's the comics with their near-the-knuckle jokes about mothers-in-law and "queers" plus the northern urge to have a good time and spend that has built the base for the big American stars.

It's a plush, big-money world these days, but the fatrground and bingo tycoons know they have to give value for money. Unfortunately, the setup is not conducive to finding new talent and the singing policemen and ukulele-playing milkmen are confined more than ever to the cheaper club circuit.

The wedding of tennis stars Chris Evert and Jimmy Conners has been indefinitely postponed, the Berkshire Eagle reported in Pittsfield, Mass.
